ALBANY, April 4, 1847. Two steamers came up within four miles of the city to-day. One of these was probably the boat which left New York last evening, and has returned down the river. The other vessel was the tow boat Commerce, and appeared to have made no headway at the time this despatch was closed. The weather is represented to be beautifully mild and pleasant at the various stations on the line of telegraph between this point and Buffalo.

AFFAIRS IN WASHINGTON.

Washington, April 2, 1847. Party Polities-Injustice to the Secretary of War -General Taylor-General Butler-Mr. Walker-The Isthmus of Huasacualco.

What an incrustation of sordidness do party politics leave on the character ! How it smothers even the noble impulses of patriotism ! The first exclamation of the whig presses on the receipt of the recent glorious victory achieved by our army at Buena Vista, was, "What an escape for the administration!" Political antagonism was the most prominent feeling excited by the intelligence of a new and great triumph of the Ameri-can arms—an invidious anxiety lest the victory should at all redound to the glory of the administration. No sigh for the brave men who died fighting for their country-no paean to the praise of the gallant old veteran who drove the boastful enemy back into the wilderness, scattering the hordes brought together for the destruction of his fearless little army-no hosanna to the God of battles for the preservation of our army, and for the maintenance of the honor of our flag. Nothing, but "What an escape for the administration!" Apart from its abominable bad taste, the exclanation is utterly illogical and unjust, and the charge against the Secretary of War of gross ig-norance in leaving General Taylor defenceless, is baseless, and without a shadow of justification. Had General Taylor's army been cut to pieces, it would have been the fault of Congress, and not of the administration. The combined attack on Vera Cruz and the castle of S. Juan d'Ulúa. was decided upon early last winter. General Scott was sent down for the purpose of taking the city, and at the same time the President attempted to supply the place of the troops, Gen. Scott would be obliged to detach from Gen. Taylor's command, by earnestly recommending to Congress the organization of an additional force of ten regiments. Congress neglected, until too late for any practical purpose, to comply with this recommendation. The bill was not passed until within a short time of the adjournment, and thus the Secretary of War was left without means wherewith to furnish General Taylor for active operations. Under these circumstances he felt compelled to order General Taylor to establish his headquarters at Monterey, where he could defend himself without loss against all odds; so that instead of leaving General Taylor defenceless, the Secretary of War exercised the utmost providence and foresight in consulting for the safety of the general and the army. Had Congress at once authorized the organization of ten regiments, in accordance with the carnest solicitation of the President and the Secretary of War, General Taylor would have felt himself sufficiently strong to meet the enemy without a doubt as to the consequences; and after the late action at Buena Vista, he could have followed up his victory and cut to pieces the remnants of Santa Anna's discomfited army. In the absence of this additional force, the Secretary of War adopted the only practicable means to secure the safety of the army, by commanding it to be housed in safe quarters. General Taylor, availing himself of that large discretion which has, since the commencement of the war, been generously conceded to him by the department, preferred to meet the enemy in the open field, and the result has justified as well his own dauntless valor, as the caution and foresight of the Secretary of War-for he has won a great victory-he has purchased it dearly. little army has earned for itself imperishable honors-numbers of its gallant spirits have been quenched out for ever. Nearly three hundred brave hearts are stilled. Probably as many more disabled for a lifetime. The enemy has been repulsed with tremendous loss. Our army has maintained its position at vast expense of life. General Tayfor has earned fresh laurels-he has purchased them at a high price. Gen. Butler speaks of the gallant old man in terms of high praise-as one brave man speaks of another. The utmost cordiality exists between them. Before the news of the late battle arrived, General Butler was of opinion that Gen. Faylor would fight Santa Anna immediately outside Saltillo, on the hill west of the city. This spot had been chosen by himself and Gen. Worth on the unanimous report of the topographical engineers, in its favor, as the most eligible position for meeting the enemy. More extended ob-servations, doubtless, decided Gen. Taylor int, vor of Buena Vista. Gen. Butler was not alte gether without apprehensions for Taylor's sat ty, although his hopes predominated over hi ears. When the rumor came that Taylor was falling back on Monterey, his apprehensions were dissipated. If Taylor could draw Santa Anna into the mouth of the pass, he said, he was safe. He describes the road leading from Saltillo and Monterey, as traversing a wide plain im-mediately outside the city, before it approaches the mountains. By degrees it enters a gorge in the mountains, wide at the mouth, but narrowing as it proceeds, until at length it winds through a narrow defile, (" los muertos.") Had General Taylor posted himself at the mouth of this pass, and disposed his army so that his flanks would be protected by the moun-tains on either side, he would have been in absolute safety. Santa Anna could not have profited by his; numerical superiority, from which the only thing General Taylor had to fear would be their lapping over his flanks and surrounding him. A few miles beyond los muertos, on the road to Monterey, is the Rinconada pass. Both defiles are occupied at each end by our troops.

General Butler's leg is still painful. The wound which was made by a bullet entering below the knee and passing down through the fleshy part, grazing the bone in its passage, was treated unskilfully, the muscle being allowed to attach itself to the bone before the re-formation of the membrane. An awkward and painful contraction s the consequence.

Mr. Walker's arduous labors during the late session have at length produced their effect in prostrating his strength by a severe and painful illness. His energy and zeal in the performance of his duty, are nevertheless unabated. For weeks he has been confined to his reem, deprived of his voice by severe indisposition, and yer, ed his business with scarcely any intermission. It is astonishing that a frame so apparently fra gile, can bear such immense labor. It was during this illness that the Mexican tariff published in to-day's Union, and of the appearance of which I notified you some days ago, was perfected This document bears evidence of the vast leb t and research necessary to its completion.
